

The 5-Zone Face Tension Self-Check

A gentle two-minute check-in to see where your face is holding the most tension — so you know where a few quiet minutes will help most. This is a self-assessment of how your face feels, not a medical diagnosis.

For each area below, circle the number that best matches how it feels most days · 1 rested 2 a little 3 tense.

	Eyes Puffiness, heaviness, or a tired look in the morning.	1 rested	2 a little	3 tense
	Brows & Forehead Tightness, a furrowed feeling, or the "11" lines by evening.	1 rested	2 a little	3 tense
	Cheeks & Smile Lines Cheeks sitting a little lower, or deeper smile lines lately.	1 rested	2 a little	3 tense
	Jaw & Neck Clenching, tightness, or a little fullness under the chin.	1 rested	2 a little	3 tense
	Glow & Circulation Skin looking flat, dull, or puffy rather than fresh.	1 rested	2 a little	3 tense

The area with your highest number is where your face is asking for a little attention first. Turn the page to see what that means — and where to start.

Reading Your Face, Zone by Zone

Whichever area scored highest on your check-in, start there. Here's what tension in each zone usually means — and one small thing to try today.

Eyes

- 1 Puffiness and heaviness here usually build up overnight from screen time, dehydration, and fluid that hasn't had a chance to move.

Try: a light sweep under the eye toward the temple, morning and night.

Often connected: lingering puffiness isn't always just about the eyes — a tight jaw or a tense forehead just above can hold fluid there too. Worth checking those zones if this one stays high.

Brows & Forehead

- 2 A tight, furrowed feeling — or lines showing up by evening — often comes from squinting at screens or carrying stress high in the face.

Try: press-and-release along the brow bone, working from center outward.

Cheeks & Smile Lines

- 3 Cheeks sitting a little lower, or smile lines feeling deeper, is often about circulation and tone easing off over time — not something sudden.

Try: upward strokes from the corner of the mouth toward the cheekbone.

Honestly: this eased in gradually, so it eases back the same way — steady, quiet minutes matter far more than one big effort.

Jaw & Neck

- 4 Clenching, tightness, or fullness under the chin usually points to daytime jaw tension and drainage that's slowed down.

Try: a slow jaw release, then a gentle downward sweep along the neck.

Honestly: a clenching habit took months to settle in — give it a few consistent weeks before you judge whether it's working.

Glow & Circulation

- 5 Skin that looks flat or dull rather than fresh is more often about slower circulation than it is about aging.

Try: a full-face sweep from the center out, finishing behind the ears.
